Types of Construction (Definitions)

California Building Code Chapter 6 contains the requirements to classify buildings into one of five types of construction. Many code requirements applicable to a building, such as allowable height, allowable floor area, fire separation distances, building materials, etc. are dependent on its type of construction.

Types I and II construction are those types of construction in which the building elements (i.e., roof, walls, floors, and structural frame) are of noncombustible materials, except as specifically permitted in California Building Code Section 603 and elsewhere in the code.

Type III construction is that type of construction in which the exterior walls are of noncombustible materials and the interior building elements are of any material permitted by the code. Fire-retardant-treated wood framing is permitted within exterior wall assemblies of a 2-hour rating or less.

Type IV construction (Heavy Timber, HT) is that type of construction in which the exterior walls are of noncombustible materials and the interior building elements are of solid or laminated wood without concealed spaces. Minimum solid sawn nominal dimensions are required for structures built using Type IV construction (HT).

Type V construction is that type of construction in which the structural elements, exterior walls and interior walls are of any materials permitted by this code.

Construction Types I, II, III, IV and V are further subdivided into two categories, A and B, that identify differences in the degree of fire-resistance required.

1,000,000.01	and up	7,636.75	2.15	1,000.00

This Building Valuation Fee Table is used to calculate the inspection fee which, is then used to calculate the total (plan check and inspection) permit cost for valuation based permits. The cost of plan check is calculated by multiplying the cost of inspection by a factor of 0.65.
